Sulphuric Acid in 1916

The production of sulphuric acid in the United States in 1916 was much greater than in 1915. The estimated production of sulphuric acid of strengths of 50 degree, 60 degrees and 66 degrees in 1916 expressed in terms of 50 degree acid, is 4,475,000 tons, an estimated increase over the production in 1915 of 600,000 tons, or more than 15 per cent. The increase was distributed about equally between acids of strengths of 50 degrees and 60 degrees, as there was a small decrease in the production of acid of strength of 66

The most notable feature in the sulphuric acid industry was the enormous increase in the production of acids of strengths greater than 66 degrees. The estimate shows a production of these stronger acids of over a million tons as against a production of less than 200,-000 tons in 1915. It is not feasible to express the amount of these higher acids in terms of 50 degrees acid; therefore the total given for them is in addition to the total given for acids of strength of 66 degrees or less.

The estimated output of acids of strengths of 60 degrees and 66 degrees includes by-product acid produced at copper and zinc smelters. The output of acid so produced in 1916, expressed as 60 degrees acid, amounted to nearly 950,000 tons, or practically the same as in 1915. However, over 110,000 tons of acid of higher strengths was produced at these smelters, a quantity nearly double that produced in 1915.

The market conditions throughout the country are reported to have been on the whole better than in 1915, and the value of the product will probably be somewhat higher than it was even during that year of high prices.

The estimates are based on returns received by Philip S. Smith, of the United States geological survey, department of the interior, from more than 95 per cent of the outputs of the rest. It is believed that the figures are reasonable and that they will approximate very closely the final figures, which will be made up when the complete returns are

About 27,000 Tons.

Preliminary estimates by D. F. Hewett, of the United States geological survey, department of the interior, show that the production of manganese ore in 1916 was about 27,000 tons, the greatest since 1888 and nearly three times that in 1915, which was 9,700 tons. The artishment of the state college of iculture has bought more than 300 to 1916.
